Ode to Winsted

A Visit to the Town South of Town

By Bill Price and Seth Kershner

For many families who’ve lived in Sandisfield for generations, Winsted has been the go-to town all their lives. Summer folks who come to Sandisfield from The City often drive up Rt. 8, and Winsted is their last stop before the near wilderness that is Sandisfield.

Winsted thus is often the first – or the last – stop. Plus, the drive, only about 12 miles from here to there, is beautiful, no matter how you go.

Heading south, if you like back roads, you can take any of several narrow country lanes or even, if you prefer, the main “back” road, Rt. 183 through Colebrook. 183 ends at Rt. 44. Turn left and you’ll be on the western edge of Winsted.

The main road to Winsted, heading south on Rt. 8, is a wide, recently re-paved highway of gentle curves, easy driving, a few beautiful views of Colebrook River Lake on your left, cliffs and steep slopes on your right. Soon you’ll be in Connecticut on a lovely drive at 45 mph through a residential section that leads through Winchester to the north side of Winsted.

Which is closer than anywhere else, and a pleasure to get to.

Once you’re there, you’ll find – for the most part – what you need. And an interesting town with a fascinating history.

Winsted is unique. Its Main Street has only one side, the north side. Most of the south side of Main Street went missing more than 60 years ago during the Big Flood of 1955, washed away down the Mad River, some of it likely winding up in Torrington.

But what remains is what you need in a town.

If you’re thirsty and you enjoy local breweries, you’ll find the Little Red Barn Brewery. It’s brand new, its beer is cold and fresh, and you’ll quench your thirst.

If you’re hungry and you like Italian, you’re in a good place. It seems that northwestern Connecticut was populated, after the Native Americans, by Italians who came to build the cities and bridges of New York and New England and stayed to make their homes and raise their families. They’re still here. You can stop at Mario’s Restaurant on Main Street. Or the Monaco. Or ABC Pizza. Or Noli’s. Or, east of town, at Sophia’s. You won’t go wrong at any of them.

If you’re hungry for something else, you can stop at The Winsted Diner or Noujaim’s Bistro or Hunny Bunn’s Bakery. Or the Tributary for a fresh fish supper. The Tributary offers lobster nights every Tuesday in July and August (write that down for next summer).

Or, on the days when it is open, stop at Padre’s Mexican Cantina. Padre’s has a wall of tequilas you’ve never heard of but will be glad you sampled. But don’t taste them all, or at least take your time. Try a margarita. The New York Times did, in 2010, calling the place “the very definition of a hole in the wall” before praising the drinks and the food to all its city slicker readers.

Why an “Ode to Winsted” in The Sandisfield Times?

Sandisfield has a long personal connection with Winsted. The stage ran up from there until 1919; the U.S. mail came/went from there; the first phone lines came through Winsted and a few land lines still exist with exchange numbers from that time; many residents, done with farming, moved to Winsted with its services and good homes between the 1890s and 1920s; the market was important for decades, especially for South Sandisfield farmers. And Winsted, as our closest “big town,” remains our good neighbor.
Rich History
Just South of the Border

By Verna Gilson

Winsted and Winchester are located in the northwestern corner of Connecticut, a short distance from the Massachusetts line. Winchester, settled in 1732 and named for the cathedral town in England, officially became a town in 1771. That same year, Winsted – named for a combination of Winchester and Barkhamsted – was settled along the Mad and Still Rivers. Winsted became a city within Winchester in 1917 and continues to serve as that town’s business district.

The landscape of Winsted and Winchester ranges from rocky slopes to steep mountains and rolling valleys. Rivers, lakes, and streams abound, and Highland Lake, surrounded by a scenic drive, rises nearly 150-feet above the business district.

Winchester’s grassy slopes were once ideal for dairy farming and cattle breeding, and it produced tons of cheese. Winsted had tremendous waterpower and was an industrial giant from the mid-19th through early-20th century, manufacturing tools, knives, clocks, pins, hardware, hosieries, silk thread, and more, for domestic and foreign markets. Coach roads, railway connections, and trolley service greatly benefitted this region’s economy and promoted tourism. Winsted once had an opera house, indoor skating rink, hotels, amusement parks, horseracing, and businesses that lined Main Street.

After nearly a century of economic growth and prosperity, Winsted was greatly affected by world affairs in the 20th century. Much of its workforce went off to war, rail and trolley service ended, and the demand for goods it produced declined. When a disastrous flood struck downtown Winsted in 1955, resulting in seven fatalities, many businesses and factories were forced to close and countless jobs were lost. The community rallied, but was never the same after the flood.

Winsted and Winchester are proud of their past and the majestic churches, fine architecture, and memorial monuments that define it. Ask locals about points-of-interest, and they are sure to mention the Soldiers’ Monument, a 65-foot granite structure that honors those who served in the Civil War; Highland Lake, with its public beaches, state boat launch, and recreational opportunities; and Beardsley Library, which was built in 1899 and has an extensive genealogy and local history collection.

Winsted – once known as the “Laurel City” for the mountain laurel indigenous to this region – revels in community celebrations. In 1933, the first of many Laurel Festivals was held. Other annual events include a Pet Parade, Gator Parade, Penguin Plunge, Firemen’s Carnival, and cemetery walk.

Winsted’s Green District, Main Street, and Winchester Historical Society have received historic designations, and Winchester Center, on Route 263, retains its Colonial charm. Winsted is home to Northwestern Connecticut Community College, which has outstanding programs and an impressive campus, and the site of many historic structures that have been converted into museums, studios, shops, offices, housing, and, most recently, a brewery.

Everyone in Sandisfield is encouraged to take a day-trip to Winsted, a town rich in history, just across the border. ☎

Or the new Mama Pho on Main Street where the specialty dish is pho, a type of Vietnamese soup of broth, noodles, herbs, and beef. Mama Pho also serves a wide variety of vegetarian dishes this time of year. Follow whatever you order with a delectable Vietnamese iced coffee.

There is a row of antique stores, good for stopping in and carrying something home.

Across the Mad River, you can have your boat shrink-wrapped for the winter at Laurel City Marina or replace your windshield wipers at Levine Auto Parts.

If you want ice cream in the spring, summer, and fall, stop at the Dairy Queen, like the one you went to as a kid.

A lot of Sandisfielders buy their week’s groceries at Stop&Shop, a full-service grocery just east of town at the Ledgebrook Plaza. Dog grooming and the Ledgebrook Spirit Shop are around the corner, near Sophia’s Restaurant.

A little further along 44, at Mallory Brook Plaza is a Tractor Supply Store, where you can get a new shirt, chicken feed, or a Husqvarna chain saw. Across the plaza is the multiplex Apple Theatre. But a row of empty storefronts is discouraging. You can read what used to be there.

As with many small American towns, Winsted has its share of deserted manufacturing buildings that with hard work and a lot of money could be restructured into businesses or apartments. But that last idea is long in planning, long in coming, and expensive. Whiting Mills and the new Little Red Barn Brewery are examples of what can work, like the reconfigured Gilbert Clock Factory apartments along the Still River just north of town.

Several stores along Main Street are empty. One of the empties is the Semi-Auto Gun Shop, which may be the only closed gun store in America.

Visit the American Museum of Tort Law, an idea of Ralph Nader, a Winsted native. Or work out at the YMCA which has a very good weight room, a good pool, a basketball court, and offers 3-month memberships for not a lot of money.

Visit R&B Sports World, located behind the Tributary Restaurant. Batting cages, a go-cart track, miniature golf, an incredible ultra-modern play space for kids (socks only), and noisy games that can separate you from your coins, but you’ll have fun anyway.

Time your visit right and you can take in a movie at the Gilson Café Cinema and order supper on a tray right at your seat. It is a rare treat. No one in Sandisfield – or Winsted – should miss it. The Gilson shows current movies that you want to see.

If you head home on Rt. 8 at lunchtime, stop for a hand-made sandwich at John’s Import Deli. Get a beer next door at John’s Package Store. Probably you can’t wait to get home to eat that sandwich and you’ll pull off at the boat landing at Colebrook River Lake to enjoy the view and the great taste.

Then come on north to home, knowing a lot more about the town just south of here. ☎
Whiting Mills

By Kristina Blachere | Photos: Bill Price

Just off Route 44, along the banks of the Still River, stands Whiting Mills, a cluster of red-brick mill buildings that serve as a link and a living tribute to Winsted’s industrial past.

The 135,000 square foot complex was built in 1901 for the Winsted Hosiery Company, which soon became the largest hosiery manufacturer in Connecticut and one of the largest industrial employers in the area. World War II brought a decline in employment, followed by the devastating flood of 1955, and the company’s 1965 relocation to North Carolina.

The buildings subsequently fell into disrepair and languished until 2004, when Eva and Jean-Paul Blachere purchased the complex. Their team, led by building manager Sandy Evans, began the painstaking process of clearing out old machinery, replacing windows and roofs, and refurbishing the original wood floors.

Their vision: to transform and breathe new life into a piece of New England history, and attract a new generation of creative, industrious tenants who would be proud to call Whiting Mills – and Winsted – home.

Today the building is full of artists and craftspeople who enjoy the spacious, light-filled studios, as well as retail shops, small manufacturing companies, and other local businesses. The beautifully renovated buildings, which have retained their turn-of-the-century industrial aesthetic, have become a hub of artistic, community, and social events, culminating in popular semi-annual Open Studios.

Whiting Mills was ranked the “Best Artists’ Community in New England” in 2016 by Yankee Magazine’s Editor’s Choice Awards.

In 2006, another link was forged when the American Mural Project (AMP) bought two of the buildings in the Whiting Mills complex to house the largest indoor collaborative artwork in the world: a massive mural tribute to American workers that will open in 2020. With AMP alongside it, Whiting Mills is a proud living monument to times past and the endurance of American creativity, ingenuity, and capacity for re-invention.

The New Place Just Across the River

LITTLE RED BARN BREWERS

The Little Red Barn, open for business.

After two years of hard work, including a successful Kickstarter campaign that raised $34,006, a microbrewery opened its doors in late June just across the Mad River from downtown Winsted.

For more than 18 years, the former Winsted Edge Tool Works (1860-1950) building stood vacant and falling apart. Until the summer of 2017, that is, when Parker Benjamin Real Estate Services of Unionville submitted a proposal to the town to renovate and purchase the building for $1,000.

The Little Red Barn Brewers (LRBB) soon chose the building for its move into “town” from their beginnings in Barkhamstead, just to the east.

“When we first came here there was no roof on this building, no windows, no plumbing or electric,” co-owner Matthew Day said. “We knew it was going to take a long time to fix it up to get it open, but it came out exactly the way we wanted it to. It’s fantastic.”

Walking into the location of the brewery, it’s hard to believe that the building was in a distressed and dilapidated state for nearly two decades.

The furniture and some of the equipment in the bar area was made from wood reclaimed from barns and other sources in Norfolk and Sandisfield. Several of the beer tap handles are former chisels made in the building when it was the Winsted Edge Tool Works.

Behind the service area, the Little Red Barn brews 210-gallon batches at a time.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

“We sell a whole variety of beers,” co-owner Nils Johnson said. “IPAs are popular, so we are going to sell at least two kinds. But during our opening weekend, the Pilsner and Red were the top sellers. There is something for everyone here. We always have a guest cider and right now we are partnering with Hopkins Vineyard in New Preston and offering the reds and whites here.”

“It takes eight hours to brew our beers,” co-owner Nathan Day said, “and from the time you brew it to the time you serve the beer, it takes two to three weeks. We chose the kinds of beers that we serve because we started off making what we like to drink.”

The three co-owners, brothers Matthew and Nathan Day and Nils Johnson, said that they put a lot of hard work in getting Little Red Barn Brewers open. Having produced their first batch of beer in Barkhamstead in an actually former “little red horse barn” loaned to them by Johnson’s parents, they moved into the falling-down former industrial building two years ago.

The three said the hard work was worth it. “We wanted to make sure that this was in Winsted because the town was very much behind it,” Nathan Day said. “The town wanted us here. It was an easy choice.”

“The feedback has been overwhelming,” Johnson said. “We’ve had families, old people, young people, bikers, and accountants. Everyone is coming together here as a community center. That’s what we hoped would happen.”

Fantastic food truck service is backed up by delivery from the Winsted Diner, just across the river, which has created a menu specifically for the LRB.

Music events are held on many nights. Open at noon until 10:00 p.m. (3:00-9:00 on Wednesday, closed Monday and Tuesday). Outdoor service or inside, the place can get crowded.

Carbon’s Food Stand

Stop in the roadside pull-out on Rt. 8 just north of Winsted between about July 10 and the weekend after Labor Day and bring home the best corn in Connecticut (and maybe Massachusetts).

Dorothy and Jim Carbon have been selling fresh produce on that spot for 25 years. Before that, Jim ran a produce warehouse in Waterbury.

When they’re not here on the job the pull-out looks forlorn. After Labor Day, they drive back to North Carolina, “resting up,” Dorothy says, “for next summer.”

They sell not only the best corn but maybe the best peaches, the best tomatoes, and much of the best of other vegetables and fruits. They will also sell you a saddle and bridle, whether you have a horse or not. During the winter, Jim works with leather.

He claims that he knows every corn joke in the world. Do yourself a favor, and don’t ask for a sample. If you do, you’ll get an earful of more corn than you can shuck.

Who hasn’t marveled at those wonderful turn-of-the-century images of Sandisfield residents, beautiful homes and public buildings, and quiet country lane and pastoral views? Some were postcards sent from this quaint Berkshire town by summer tourists to envious friends and relations. Many of those have found their way back here complete with messages from ‘Aunt Tilly’ who is “having a wonderful time.” Others are in family scrapbooks or are framed and adorning walls. There are some 100 high quality images of Sandisfield mostly dating from the 1900s. We used as many as possible to tell Sandisfield’s story in 2012 in Sandisfield Then and Now.

The photographer behind this collection was Frank H. DeMars. DeMars set out to photograph enchanting or simply every-day scenes in the hill towns of northwestern Connecticut and South County. If he couldn’t get to a place with his horse and buggy, he found locals with a good eye and photographic skill and he may have bought up local collections. According to Sandisfield native Katherine Ives, her great grandfather, Gilbert Ives, was probably behind the camera for many of the DeMars Sandisfield images.

While DeMars did not grow rich from his photos and post cards, the collection is now a priceless legacy to the heritage of many towns in this area. He must have realized how important his quest would be to posterity. His heirs have donated the Massachusetts Berkshire portion of the collection to the Great Barrington Historical Society for safe-keeping and educational purposes. We are grateful to Winsted’s visionary photographer, Mr. Frank DeMars, for his gift.

The first public exhibit of the DeMars photographs in 2011 was at the Whiting Mills gallery in Winsted, owned and operated by Eva and Jean-Paul Blachere of Sandisfield.

Why Winsted?

By Shaw Israel Izikson

This is a question many people have asked me over the past 18 years, since I first moved to town.

Over the years, Winsted has had a reputation of sorts of being the home to a dysfunctional community filled with argumentative people and a broken municipal government. All of that ended a few years back when, after a lengthy investigation, the town’s former finance director was sentenced to jail for several years due to his numerous illegal activities. With the town’s municipal government cleaned up, much of the fussing and fighting among residents have disappeared.

Back then, the dark clouds surrounding the town prevented people from looking at what Winsted has to offer.

Years ago a friend of mine lived in Winsted for a few years and didn’t even know that Highland Lake existed. “A lake? In Winsted? Where?” she asked me a year after she moved out.

While it may be too late for her to visit because she moved several hours away, it’s not too late for you, readers of The Sandisfield Times, to visit Highland Lake, which is located a few miles off Main Street. The scenic 445-acre lake includes two beaches and a boat launch.

Along with Highland Lake, there are other treasures in Winsted, including the Whiting Mills artist studios building, cultural events at Northwestern Connecticut Community College, the American Museum of Tort Law and at the Beardsley and Memorial Library, the Steam...
Vent Coffee House monthly musicians showcase at the First Congregational Church of Winsted, and various fairs and festivals.

We also have a newspaper, both online and in print, to cover everything from top to bottom about the area: The Winsted Phoenix. Previously, I was editor for The Winsted Journal for three years. Sadly, the newspaper was shut down by its owners two years ago. Now, a bunch of residents has teamed up with me to start a new news outlet that is located online at www.winstedphoenix.org.

The importance of independent media continues to grow as newspapers across the country continue to be shut down by corporate owners. Increasingly, we are living in news deserts where information and news are hard to come by. Even with Facebook and social media, we are living in a society where communities are disconnected from news and information.

This is why people need to support The Sandisfield Times. The Times keeps people in the community connected by reporting on what is going on, whether it is culture or municipal government. In this day and age, we need to stay connected to our communities, our municipal government, and each other. Newspapers are the best way to keep these connections going and that is why The Sandisfield Times – and the Winsted Phoenix – have to keep going.

As for Winsted, consider this an open invitation to visit at any time!

If you have any questions about the town or need directions, feel free to contact Shaw Israel Izickson, an admin with the Phoenix, at winstedphoenix@gmail.com.

The DPW at Work

It’s More than Just Roads

By Seth Kershner

On June 14, Department of Public Works Superintendent Brad Curry kicked off summer with a win for his team at the Berkshire County Highway Superintendents Association charity golf tournament. Held at the Skyline Country Club in Lanesboro, proceeds from the tournament go towards the One Call Away Foundation, which provides critical support to veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder.

Back home and on our roads, Curry and his crew have been busy this summer patching Route 57 and Route 183; grading and ditch cleaning on Dodd Road; and repairing culverts on Silverbrook Road. To better manage all the work this season, the Town hired an outside company for two weeks to help with grading of secondary roads in the South Sandisfield area. The winning bid, from White Wolf Trucking and Excavation, charged an all-inclusive rate of $90 per hour. Curry considered this an excellent deal, as other bids exceeded $100 and charged extra for mileage. The result was a lot of extra help at a cost to the Town of about $8,000.

At the end of August, the crew will begin a new round of pothole patching, with West Street being a priority.

Besides having to oversee repairs to more than 90 miles of roads in Town, the DPW is also charged with maintaining municipal buildings and the transfer station – a lot of work for a staff of four, including the Superintendent. As Curry told the Times in a phone interview, he is constantly “looking at ways to work within a limited budget.” Which is one reason Sandisfield DPW has teamed up with their counterparts in New Marlborough to apply for MassGrant funding to overhaul Route 57. Full-depth reclamation with asphalt injection, plus culvert replacement equals a costly project that neither community could afford to pay for through municipal budgeting. They have to wait until October to hear if they will be awarded the funding.

In the meantime, Curry says he plans to better educate residents on DPW work by posting regular updates on the Town website. He will also make his crew and equipment available to two kid-friendly fall events sponsored by the Recreation Committee: Touch a Truck on September 15, and the Halloween-themed Trunk or Treat.

Down at the SilverBrook

It’s happening. Seth Fritch and Melissa Gabso have installed a new roof on the garage (not the section they had hoped to start with, but the closest to falling apart, so it cried out to be fixed first). Now they’re using the garage as a tool shed and lumber yard, having moved on to the apartment upstairs, buying new kitchen fixtures and rehabbing the place. They hope to be able to rent out the two-bedroom apartment in a couple of months. They’ve also started on the bar downstairs, but not as aggressively. They hope to move into the smaller apartment upstairs, perhaps this fall. So, it is happening, down at the SilverBrook.

The winning bid, from White Wolf Trucking and Excavation, charged an all-inclusive rate of $90 per hour. Curry considered this an excellent deal, as other bids exceeded $100 and charged extra for mileage. The result was a lot of extra help at a cost to the Town of about $8,000.

At the end of August, the crew will begin a new round of pothole patching, with West Street being a priority.

Besides having to oversee repairs to more than 90 miles of roads in Town, the DPW is also charged with maintaining municipal buildings and the transfer station – a lot of work for a staff of four, including the Superintendent. As Curry told the Times in a phone interview, he is constantly “looking at ways to work within a limited budget.” Which is one reason Sandisfield DPW has teamed up with their counterparts in New Marlborough to apply for MassGrant funding to overhaul Route 57. Full-depth reclamation with asphalt injection, plus culvert replacement equals a costly project that neither community could afford to pay for through municipal budgeting. They have to wait until October to hear if they will be awarded the funding.

In the meantime, Curry says he plans to better educate residents on DPW work by posting regular updates on the Town website. He will also make his crew and equipment available to two kid-friendly fall events sponsored by the Recreation Committee: Touch a Truck on September 15, and the Halloween-themed Trunk or Treat.
What's a Sign Worth?

In Sandisfield, It Seems, a Lot.

By Bill Price

The Sandisfield Arts Center installed a proud new sign in June 2018. A committee worked hard on the wording and the look of the sign and the elegant frame. When installed, the sign was attached to the Rt. 57 guardrail for stability.

The sign replaced the original Arts Center sign put up about fifteen years ago with movable letters that announced Center programs, almost exactly where the old sign stood, at the intersection of Hammertown Road and Rt. 57 (Sandisfield Road). The original sign had also been attached to the guardrail.

Then came, Oops! The building inspector reported that, including the wooden frame, the new sign was 6’4” x 9’4”, which amounts to 30.16 square feet. The old sign was 4’ x 7’. Town bylaws restrict commercial or other non-residential use signs from exceeding 20 square feet. The sign was too big.

Larger signs can be installed by going through the Town’s special permit process and approval by the Select Board. The Center believed it had been granted a special permit.

But, Oops! again.

At the Select Board meeting this February 11, minutes record that “Former Selectman John Skrip may have misled the Board regarding the special permit.” The Board found that the process was not followed, there was no public meeting, and that “John Skrip is the Treasurer for Arts Center and signed the permit as a Selectman.” The Board found the current situation “unacceptable and will have the Center go through the special permit process.”

Thus ensued a series of friendly visits between Susie Crofut, representing the Arts Center, and Dolores Harasyko, Town Clerk, and attempts at compromise.

Ultimately, the Center applied for its special permit and followed the prescribed process of notifying abutters, advertising, and asking for a public meeting.

The public meeting held July 15 didn’t exactly go well. Selectman Brian O’Rourke spelled out the issues: “the signpost is attached to the Rt. 57 guardrail; it is larger than legally permitted; it does not meet setback requirements; and a resident has complained about the sight line.” Direct abutter Keith Larson said the sign, right next to his driveway, blocks the sight of oncoming traffic from the left.

Others waded in, all extolling the virtues of the Arts Center and admiring the work it does and its value to the community. After nearly an hour of discussion, during which a few temperers were exercised, especially during a review of the original special permit and it’s signing, O’Rourke “reiterated that the placement is an issue. The Town and state have a right-of-way and the sign is on a Town-owned guardrail, not on Arts Center property.” Jean Atwater-Williams suggested a compromise “of moving the sign minimally away from the guardrail by perhaps 10 feet off the road and free standing.” Selectman O’Rourke, reported the minutes, said that in his personal opinion “the issue is not so much with the size, but with the location. He confirms that when the abutter pulls out of his driveway the sight line is obstructed.”

O’Rourke suggested a site visit following the evening. The other two Selectmen agreed to the visit and to reconvene the public hearing July 29.

The resolution on the 29th was that the second application for a special permit was allowed, but ... with the proviso that the sign be moved away from the guardrail, 10 feet back from the curb cut and 4 feet east.

Resolution at last, not to the satisfaction of everyone but, at least, resolution.

Okay, one sign dispute settled, and immediately another shows up, this one right in the front yard of Town Hall Annex.

At the August 12 Select Board meeting, it was announced that the Berkshire Natural Resources Council has asked permission to install a sign at Town Hall Annex so hikers can find the entrance to the Clam River Trail. Several would-be hikers complained last year that they searched for the trailhead, which begins just off the Annex parking lot, but couldn’t find it or the Town Hall.

Nearly everyone living in Sandisfield knows the Town Hall Annex is located in the former school building at 66 Sandisfield Road (Rt. 57). Few out-of-towners know that. Since the only sign identifying the Annex is on the roof over the door making it difficult to spot when passing by on the road, the BNRC offered to do the Town a favor and share the cost of the sign and have it read:

Sandisfield Town Hall Municipal Offices Council on Aging Clam River Trailhead

After discussion at the Board meeting, which included at times the phrase “common sense,” along with its opposing “according to the bylaws,” the decision was made that for the BNRC to place any sign on Town property the state entity would have to apply for a special permit.

“Like the Arts Center,” agreed the Selectmen.

Which means an application for a permit has to be filled out at Town Hall and the $50 fee paid, abutters notified by registered mail (maybe as much as $200-$300), the permit application advertised for two weeks in a local newspaper (cost about $300), a public meeting announced, and a unanimous vote of the Selectmen gained before the sign can be approved.

Town Clerk Dolores Harasyko estimated the cost of a special permit at about $800. The BNRC, a nonprofit state organization, funded like much of Sandisfield’s road work by the state legislature, has spent thousands of dollars building the Clam River Trail which brings people unfamiliar with Sandisfield to our town.

Planning Board Chairman Roger Kohler, present at the meeting, said the Planning Board may look into and reconsider the Town’s bylaws regarding signs.

No Dispute About This

Bogart Muller, Arts Center Board Member, says that “the Sandisfield Arts Center has been providing cultural activities for locals and out-of-town folks for over twenty years. There is a fabulous art gallery sponsoring local and nation-wide artists and a stage for theater events with enough seating for over a hundred people. The Center hosts galas and fundraisers, parties and entertainment, local families can see a free movie once a month with free popcorn and drinks. With the efforts of dedicated volunteers and a structured leadership staff, this place has really put Sandisfield on the map.”
The 30th anniversary of the Sandisfield Fireman’s Steak Roast, held Saturday, August 10, included honoring ceremonies for half a dozen EMS personnel.

EMT Zoe Nelson was honored for 30 years of service. Starting the same year as the first Steak Roast, she said she “just wanted to be of help to people.” She recalled that when she began there were about 20 people in her Sandisfield class. She remembered how John Brock and Nancy Creis initially helped her learn the ropes, and how “Margaret O’Clair helped me with paperwork. Some words in the training manual were a yard long, and I didn’t have a clue what they meant.” Zoe overcame all that and has been a stalwart member of the Sandisfield EMS team ever since. Now she is recertified every two years and barely bats an eye at the (at least) 3-inch thick training manual required by the state.

Also honored were Mike Morrison and Alec Morrison who responded to a motor vehicle accident, removed the young female victim from the car, and performed CPR until assistance arrived to transport her to an emergency facility. Unfortunately, the young victim died at the hospital.

Also honored were Mary Bredenfoerder, Ralph Morrison, Rico Sanchez, and Heather Wells who responded to a medical call and helped save the life of an apparent heart attack victim. Stabilizing the patient, they were met in Sandisfield by Medic 6 of Winsted and the patient then transferred to Life Star Helicopter, at the Torrington hospital parking lot, and taken to Hartford Hospital. He is presently recovering.

For the anniversary of three decades of Steak Roasts, Fire Chief Ralph Morrison said “thank you” to the nearly three-dozen businesses and individuals who donated raffle prizes and to everyone who bought chances, thus helping make this event a great fundraiser for the town’s Fire and EMS departments.

He gave another big “thank you” to his crew of volunteer firemen and EMS people who prepared Firehouse #2 for the event, served the steaks and dinners, and cleaned up after the Harm’s Way band had packed their instruments and the last steak roast guest had gone home.

Charte r OK’d by Select Board

By Bill Price

A cable franchise agreement between the Town of Sandisfield and Charter Communications/Spectrum was signed at the Selectman’s Meeting, August 26. Attending the meeting were Peter Larkin, chairman of the Massachusetts Broadband Institute (MBI), a representative from Charter Communications, and members of the Sandisfield Broadband Committee.

The agreement allows Charter to bring a cable TV system to the Town and provides it with the authority to work with MBI and the state of Massachusetts to bring a fiber internet system to homes and businesses in Sandisfield. For business reasons Charter has refused to specify “fiber only” in its contract, which was a sticking point with members of the Select Board. The MBI chairman, the Charter representative, and Jeff Bye, chair of the Broadband Committee, however, assured town officials and The Sandisfield Times that the town will receive a complete fiber network (known as FTTH – Fiber to the Home).

With those assurances, the board voted unanimously to approve the contract.

In fact, Charter no longer builds new systems with coaxial cable. Fiber allows for expansion as Broadband technology improves, while coaxial does not. Also, fiber currently costs less to produce than coaxial, has a lower maintenance cost, and is more durable.

What comes next, said Larkin, is “the most difficult part of the process, the ‘make ready’ work for Eversource and Verizon to ensure that Sandisfield’s 1,762 utility poles are sufficiently strong and ready to receive additional wiring.” The estimate for the network to be up and running is about two years.
Kayaks Misplaced, Rules Rule

By Simon Winchester

Of the 116 reservoirs in Berkshire county, one of the more modest – known officially as the North Silver Lake Reservoir – lies at the eastern end of Silverbrook Road. It is a pretty body of water; with ducks and beavers, plenty of medium-sized fish, and – happily - rather few visitors. An ideal place, it seemed to me, to teach my granddaughters – over from London for ten days – the magic of kayaking.

Accordingly I crammed our two rather venerable craft into the back of the car, made the hair-raising descent down the track beside the dam and, sliding through the mud and reeds and taking care not to disturb too many frogs, launched the kayaks onto the placid surface.

Fifteen minutes later the girls, safely life-jacketed as their mother – back in England – would have wished, were paddling perfectly happily through the evening calm, marvelling at the silence, the views, the understated charm of this corner of the Berkshire hills. They loved it: there’s not much kayaking to be had in west London, and this was, for both of them, a triumph of discovery.

They pleaded that they wanted more before their vacation was done. And so my wife and I hauled the boats up into a thicket of forest, turned them keel-side up, secured them to the bole of a small tree with a length of chain, and left them for another’s day’s aquatic fun.

That was on a Tuesday. I came back on Friday, to find this notice stapled – stapled! – to the tree.

And so of course I obeyed, right away. The offending craft were hauled out, and now are safely home, back in the barn. The children are similarly safe, back in London. But as they say back there, they are rather cheesed off.

And I am left with a simple question, for the estimable staff of our state’s Department of Conservation and Recreation – a body whose mission statement notes that it exists in part to ensure “the health and happiness of people across Massachusetts…”

Put simply: was the “DCR staff” who took the time and trouble to print – in color, no less – this notice, to insert it in a waterproof envelope and then to reach up and staple it to the tree, a miserable zealot determined on the rigid adherence to some pointless rules? Or was he, given that the wording of his Friday-written notice did not actually require us to remove the kayaks until Sunday, essentially say: this is against the rules, but I tell you what, let’s turn a blind eye until the weekend is over, and you—all have a nice time until then?

I’d like to think he belonged to the second category, and that he was a decent chap after all. My cheese-off granddaughters were less charitably disposed, however. When I reminded them that the DCR was a body set up to root for the health and happiness of people like them, they chortled in distinctly skeptical fashion. Oh sure, they say. Out of the mouths of babes...
Weekly Select Board meetings will resume after Labor Day.

Major work this summer concerned the license agreement between Charter Communications (Spectrum) and the Town to provide broadband service to Sandisfield. In this case the “devil is in the details,” and Charter’s refusal to specify “Fiber to the Home” (FTTH) as the structure of its proposed network is of concern, as this will determine the capacity of the network for future upgrades. The only hope now for a “future-capable” network, it seems, is for the Massachusetts Broadband Institute (MBI) to protect the Town’s interests by specifying fiber in their agreement with Charter.

Although the Select Board met only every other week during July and August, many special meetings filled the days in between. A Special Town Meeting was held, which passed the district school budget, with a commitment by the School Committee to work with the Board this year on next year’s budget. A public hearing was held, in two parts, with a site visit in between, to issue a special permit for a sign at the Sandisfield Arts Center. We interviewed and hired a Public Safety Officer. Work Sessions were held with the Broadband Committee and with the Tax Collector. We met with New Marlborough officials on a joint application to MassWorks for a grant to rebuild five miles of severely deteriorated Route 57, and held a special Board meeting to finalize this application. We hope to hear good news about the grant during October.

Along with regular business, we solicited bids for a cardboard compactor for the Transfer Station; discussed Fire Department vehicles, including its newly acquired tanker; met with the Planning Board; reviewed Town employee health insurance; and instituted regular trash pickups at Town buildings.

Missing the Arts Center

I have faithfully read The Sandisfield Times for ten years.

One of my favorite facets about your town is the Sandisfield Arts Center. Thus I was surprised that the Arts Center received not even a mention last month in the Moreover... column, by Simon Winchester, where he describes how the town has changed and grown since your paper started a decade ago.

Living in the busy bay area, where there’s always a lot to do but sometimes little time to do it, I’ve relished the offerings at the Arts Center, the years of hard work people dedicated to restoring it, and the role it’s played in gathering people in one beautiful location.

Often when my sisters and families were visiting, we attended the jazz music, Indian dancing, book talks, and best of all the plays by the Sandisfield Players, which my dad and mom, Sandy and Flora Parisky, performed in and which traveled to Cornwall, England, to perform Our Town at the famous Minack Theatre in 2016. I longed to attend a history talk by Val Coleman and Bill Cohn, but never seem to be in town when they appear. I love the role the Sandisfield Arts Center plays in gathering people.

Originally I read your paper while visiting my mom and dad at their Sandisfield home. When my husband and two boys arrived, I’d find the recent issues on the coffee or kitchen table. Sitting in their green Queen Ann chair in the corner of the living room, I’d lapse into bliss while reading about your town.

Later, during conversation, when they or their friends and neighbors spoke about this or that happening in town, I knew the topics. I could participate in the conversations and felt connected to the town. About four years ago, my dad made it easy for me to read the paper when he bought me an annual subscription. Now I read it in my home in California. Even though I’m way out here, it’s good to keep up with the times.

It is fun and sometimes hard to read. I love reading about the Sandisfield Arts Center, the poetry, farm life, political comings and goings. I felt helpless reading about the gas pipeline, and sad about the truck demolishing Pete’s store. I continue to know the residents from afar and once even saw that Val Coleman’s cartoon caption had been chosen as a finalist in The New Yorker magazine!

It was hard when my dad died, and I had to acknowledge that acutely when my subscription of 2018 ended. But renewing The Times helped me stay connected to your beloved small town and the communities that gather there.

I will look forward to reading The Sandisfield Times in the coming years and look forward to reading a future mention in the Moreover... column about the community and gathering that’s developed out of the Sandisfield Arts Center.

Sincerely,

Jenn Castro

Council on Aging

Well, you know what they say about the best made plans... We had the lake, the food, the grill, and even the newly functioning bathrooms. Unfortunately the weather did not cooperate. Our annual picnic ended with a mad scramble to pack up our supplies and run for cover. The wind, thunder, and an absolute downpour chased us back to the COA.

Thanks to everyone for your prep work, especially Ann Wald and Bill Carr. Next month we will continue our normal schedule and also our well attended Chair Yoga classes. Linda Riiska reminded me there are still some Farmers Market coupons, and we can still provide volunteer drivers for doctor’s appointments and errands. Also we are trying to schedule a day trip to the Butterfly Museum and Yankee Candle next month, so please let us know if you are interested. Call Linda at 258-4826 or me at 258-3314.

September “School Day” at the Arts Center

By Hilde Weisert

Chuck Berry might approve of the varied September back to school line-up at the Arts Center—a bit of history, no practical math (some poetry instead), and on September 21, as soon as 8 o’clock rolls around, the Wanda Houston Band will rock the house.

We open September 7, 2-4 p.m. for a reception for Claudia D’Alessandro’s gorgeous photographs of the natural world. In D’Allesandro’s words, “...in the sky and water and on the earth, great drama, intricate patterns, faces, shapes, and colors are all around, and sometimes, the most beautiful of these lasts only an instant.” Her photos capture those instants.

Saturday, September 21 at 10:30 a.m., part-time Sandisfield resident and historian Dr. Robert Maryks will tell a story of the impact of the racial laws on the Jews (and those who were considered Jews) under the Mussolini regime. “Fascism and Racial Laws in Mussolini’s Italy” is based on 139 letters that were exchanged between the victims of those laws (and their relatives and friends) and the Jesuit priest Pietro Tacchi Venturi (1861–1956) who interceded within the Fascist government in order to circumvent provisions of the 1938 anti-Jewish legislation.

One of the families who wrote letters was the Finzi-Continis, so we set the stage the evening before with a free grown-up film, the Academy-Award winning “The Garden of the Finzi-Continis.”

We are thrilled to finally have local favorite and internationally-known Wanda Houston and her band Saturday September 21, 8:00 p.m., ‘40s, ‘50s, and ‘60s R&B and jazz.

September wraps up with a unique poetry program with poems of masters such as Frost, Auden, Wilbur, Plath, Owen, and Yeats performed by Ben Luxon and other Sandisfield Players, in dialogue with poems they have inspired by award-winning poets Hilde Weisert, Rebecca Hart Olander, Jayne Benjulian, Irene Willis, and others. James Kraft, author and general editor of the works of Witter Bynner, will read a few of Bynner’s most enduring poems.

Sandisfield Historical Society

By Ann Wald, President

We’re still working on the Meeting House roof repair and have asked the building inspector what has to be done to get the bathroom project started.

We’re in the planning stages of a “Family Tree” contest, to help the children of our area learn about their family histories. The contest will be open to children in grades K-6 who either attend the Farmington River Regional School or whose family is current Sandisfield tax-payers (no need to be a resident). There will be different age groups for the contest and the winners of each will receive a prize to be announced and have their family trees put on display at a location to be announced. Further information will be available in a later issue. We want to also involve the parents in helping their children identify their history and actually filling out a tree with parents, grandparents and aunts and uncles and so on – as far back as you can go.

At our meeting September 14, we will go over the final plans for our Apple Festival (October 12) with a few vendors, tag sale, hot dogs, hamburgers, and the wonderful apple pies made by the ladies of the COA. Our wine and cheese event (November 9) will also honor our veterans and, of course, coming soon, is our Christmas Fair (December 7).
Barbara Elton Quilts

By Michelle Arnot

Artist Barbara Steen-Elton of Sandisfield and Boston is always in the process of making a quilt using material from men's shirts.

In earlier years, attracted to plaids and stripes – and entranced with negative and positive space – Barbara produced huge pastel drawings of men's shirts. After developing carpal tunnel syndrome, however, she abandoned drawing for a new medium: quilts.

Each unique and beautiful quilt takes 12 months to complete as she designs and composes it using a Japanese sewing technique called sashiko.

After seven years of creating mainly queen-size quilts (and actually using them), Barbara sensed creative energy flowing from the partially made quilts as she assembled them on a wall in her Sandisfield studio. Energized by the space between the pieces of fabric, she worked this new process by leaving spaces blank and seeing where that led her. In 2015 she framed these smaller pieces, which were on display in the Sandisfield Art Center in an art exhibit.

“I'm slightly appalled that I framed my art work again rather than making useful pieces,” she said, "but that's where the process has taken me.”

Monday Playgroup Returns

The Monday morning playgroup sponsored by "Southern Berkshire Kids" returns to the Sandisfield Library on September 9. Free for children from birth to five years old, the program includes crafts, singing, reading, and free play. From 9:30 until 11:00 a.m., led by Nina Carr. All are welcome.
